This assignment (and attendance more generally) is not required until after the program change period ends.

CVN students are welcome to attend the zoom class sessions "live", when possible, but you should watch the zoom recordings for every class session you missed. We will use the 'stats dashboard' from the courseworks video library to determine who viewed each zoom session recording, when, and for how long. So you need to access the recordings through courseworks to get credit. It is important to watch the entire recordings, not just look at the slides (linked on the courseworks calendar (<https://courseworks2.columbia.edu/calendar>)), since what is spoken does not always match what is written.

In addition to viewing the entire recording, CVN students should submit a public commentary in the 'Lectures' category on edstem (<https://edstem.org/us/courses/58089/discussion>). Post a separate commentary for each class session that you did not attend "live", and make sure to include the date of that class session in the commentary (the date it was recorded, not the date you watched it or the date you wrote your commentary). Make sure the name you use on edstem matches your coursework name, so we can credit you properly.

The content of these commentaries can vary widely. Point out any errors or omissions, even if just broken links, but try not to repeat what others have already posted. If you think something the instructor said was outdated, misleading, or just plain wrong, don't be shy about saying so. Your commentary might also provide links to relevant resources that could be helpful to other students in the class, but please don't ask google (or chatgpt, etc.), only link to resources you are already familiar with and can say something about that isn't self-evident from following the link. And/or tell us something you know, preferably from real-world experience, about the topic of that lecture that wasn't already covered or only mentioned in passing but you can add more depth

Submit each commentary within 72 hours after the corresponding class session, not counting university holidays and your religious holidays. This assignment (and attendance more generally) is not required until after the program change period ends.
