We will use data for who viewed each zoom session recording in the courseworks video library, which uses the courseworks names not zoom names in its 'stats dashboard'. If you access the zoom recordings some other way, we cannot give you credit

For each recording, it tells us who viewed it at all, what date(s) they viewed it, and what percent they watched. It is important to watch the recordings, not just look at the slides, since what is said does not always match what is written

In addition to viewing the entire recording as well as slides for each lecture (linked on the courseworks calendar), CVN students should submit a public commentary in the 'Lectures' category on edstem. Your audience is primarily the other students in the class, not the teaching staff

The content of these commentaries can vary widely. Point out any errors or omissions, even if just broken links, but try not to repeat what others have already posted. If you think something the instructor said was outdated, misleading, or just plain wrong, don't be shy about saying so - but keep in mind we assume students with a couple summer internships as the default audience. Some CVN students may have a decade or more work experience but this course was not designed as continuing education for a workforce audience

You might provide links to additional resources that you know about that aren't already linked on the lecture slides - but please don't just ask google (or chatgpt, etc.) for them, only link to resources you are already very familiar with and can say something about that isn't self-evident from following the link. And/or tell us something you know, preferably from real-world experience, about the topic of that lecture that wasn't already covered or only mentioned in passing but you can add more depth

Submit within 48 hours after each class session, not counting university holidays and your religious holidays
